INTERESTING LEGAL QUESTION.—Judge Meredith has just decided a case of much interest to many fiduciaries in Virginia, and for their benefit we publish the following correct abstract of the facts and the decision on them. The case was this:

An administrator qualified in December, 1864. The personal property, consisting of household and kitchen furniture, was sold in order to pay funeral expenses, doctor's bills, &c. The sale took place in December, 1864, and the property brought a most extravagant price in Confederate money, to wit: $16,693.36. The administrator paid off all the debts (none being since paid), and there was left in his hands the sum of $12,234.29 on the 1st of April, 1865. He filed a bill in Judge Meredith's Court asking how this balance should be liquidated. With the facts above stated before him, and the additional fact that in ordinary times, say in 1859 or 1860, the proceeds of the sale of the furniture would have been barely more than sufficient to pay the debts which the administrator paid, the Judge decided, that, as the administrator had the right to retain it in his hands for a longer period, and as it could not have been invested or distributed or further used in the payment of debts, and as the Confederacy fell within four months after his qualification, and before it was practicable to obtain an order for the investment of said balance, the administrator should not be required to discharge the said balance in any other than Confederate currency, and that the estate should be charged with the same as a loss.—Richmond Dispatch.

AFFAIRS AT RICHMOND.—We were deeply pained during a recent visit to the Metropolis of our State, to hear universal complaint of stagnation in business. We never saw Richmond so dull, nor her business men so desponding. They seem to have little hope of an early revival of trade and commerce, and many believe that long years will elapse before Richmond will be what it once was. The great conflagration, the present lack of capital and the general failure of crops in the State, account, in great part, for the existing depression. Complaint is made also of the fact that people have gone elsewhere, out of the State, to trade. We can only hope that, if a kind Providence shall favor us with bountiful harvest next year, Richmond will reap the fruits of her enterprise and public spirit. A great many handsome buildings have been erected on the principal business streets during the last year, and the burnt districts will, if improvement progresses at the same rate a year or two longer, be entirely covered with houses. We should speak a good word for Richmond whenever we can, and do all that in us lies, to recover her from her late terrible disaster.—Lynchburg Virginian.

A NOVEL BILL.—A bill is being prepared to provide for the purchase and working of all the distilleries in the country by the Government. It is said that twenty millions of dollars will pay for all the property now used in the lawful manufacture of ardent spirits. Two years ago there were one hundred million gallons of whiskey made and consumed, the annual tax on which, if all paid to the Government, would be two hundred millions of dollars, whereas there is now received less than twenty millions from the whole. The South is filled with illicit stills, an enormous quantity of liquor is being made, and good brands put upon it, and then it is sent North for sale. The tax upon this reputed good liquor, if properly collected, would be nearly enough to pay the interest on the national debt.—Wash. Cor. Philadelphia Inquirer.

CRINOLINE DEAD AGAIN.—The New York Round Table again announces a collapse in crinoline, and avers that "in obedience to those decrees—vague, yet imperative—which come to us from some unknown source in Paris, all inventors and dealers in patent skirts and tilting hoops must come to grief. Hooped skirts are disappearing in the streets and slowly in the drawing rooms."
